Eager-Beaver Cuban

Mario Garcia Kohly, a Cuban exile, is now in the Federal penitentiary in Lewisburg, Pa., because he worked too hard at undermining Fidel Castro. He counterfeited Cuban currency.

What most people don't realize is that it's against the law to counterfeit Cuban currency or any other nation's currency in the United States.

Kohly intended to scatter the currency around Cuba in order to upset the Cuban economy. He was arrested in the United States before he could do it, however, and was convicted.

During the war, the United States counterfeited Hitler's currency and scattered it by plane over Germany. But though Kohly checked with Central Intelligence, apparently he didn't cooperate sufficiently with Central Intelligence. For he's now in the clink.

© 1966, Bell-McClure Syndicate, Inc.